York Theatre last night were invariably followed by nods of approval,

All agreed that the improvements of e first of the group of remodelled and new theatres to open its doors had been directed and carried out with extremely good taste. The old-time garishness was gone, and in its place was a pleasing blending of cream, buff, orange and Indian red: the crate-like stack of boxes no longer made one dizzy, for now there are but three tiers on either side; the chairs were so comfortable that gracious ladies smfled forgiveness at thirsty neighbors' "I hate to trouble you;" and all about were the comfort and charm of a modern playhouse.

Such a Promenade!

"The promenade," of which one was respectfuily reminded by the programme, proved to be the ersiwhite winercom, but the only one of the old the waxen lady with the perfume squirtgun. We fancied once or twice we saw the shade of a waiter filting about, napkin on arm, but, strain it as we would, our ear could not catch the soothing, sizzing sound.

With such unholy thoughts it was a bit hard to lead the vagrant spirit to reverential regard of Gen. Lew Wallace's "Ben Her," though it must be confessed that the fine acting of J. E. Dodson as Simonides carried one more than once further away than Fortysecond street.

Klaw & Erlanger's production—like the thearte—was new and handsome, and from the star, which quitte outshone anything ever seen on a Christmas card, to the picturesque grouping on Mount Olivet, the series of pictures was rich and striking.

But best and most natural of all was the Simonides of Mr. Dodson. It almost made one fear that withering age was creeping upon this excellent actor.

Boyish Ben Hur.

Henry Woodruff, on the other hand, had youth to spare. He was an exuberantly boylsh Ben Hur, and played with such patifing fervor that sometimes his lines were all but dissipated in preath. After the general clatter and clamor of the earlier acts, however, he settled down and told the story of the Nazarene in a way to claim rapt attention.

Others of the men were guilty of a great deal of bad and noisy acting, and the work of the women was never above the level of the ordinary, the Iras of Annie Irish, for one aning, being more Tenderloinish than Egyptian.

The chariet race, run on a roaring treadmill by eight straining steeds, went with a rush, and the audience was greatly interested in the lone, longheaded bookmaker who finally cut down the odds to even on Ben Hur.

Take this tip—Bennie's "a sure thing."
